

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, November 15, 2011 3:14 AM
To: joseph.dyke@gmail.com
Subject: Morocco Elections - 25 November
Attachments: Morocco-PreElection-Statement-102611-ENG.pdf

Hi Joe – were you interested in taking to someone re: upcoming elections?

They are next week! I attached the NDI Pre-Election Assessment for your review.

Suggestions for an interview would be:

Former Ambassador Ed Gabriel – who you know

Anouar Boukhars - former visiting fellow with the Brookings Doha Center. He is a regional specialist and a regular commentator on Arab democratization, U.S. policy in the Middle East, and international security. He currently holds the position of assistant professor of international relations at McDaniel College.

Dr. J. Peter Pham - director of the Michael S. Ansari Africa Center. Full bio

You could speak to all of the above if you like – they are all incredibly well versed on the MENA region and the political environment in Morocco.

Anouar is speaking tonight at the Middle East Institute at Columbia University on: The Moroccan Constitutional Reforms and the Forthcoming Elections: Prospects of a Genuine Democracy?

Dr. Pham recently spoke with Ambassador Gabriel at The Atlantic Council at the panel: Ripples Across The Sands: The Impact of the Fall of Gaddafi on Security in the Maghreb and Sahel – link has full audio.

Let me know if this is of any interest to you and I can schedule the calls!

Best,
Sara

sara parker
senior vice president 202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Statement of the International Pre-Election Assessment Delegation to Morocco's 2011 Legislative Elections

Rabat, 26 October 2011

Within the framework of a new observation law and following discussion with relevant Moroccan government authorities, the National Democratic Institute (NDI) organized a pre-election assessment mission from October 20 to 25 as part of the Institute's overall international election observation mission for legislative elections scheduled in Morocco on November 25, 2011. The purposes of the delegation were to demonstrate the interest of the international community in the continued strengthening of democratic political processes and democratic governance in Morocco; provide an impartial and accurate assessment of the political environment and electoral preparations; and identify areas in which improvements are needed and offer recommendations to improve the integrity and transparency of these and future elections.

The delegation included: Pedro Sánchez Pérez-Castejón (Spain), political expert, who has served as an elected member in parliament and municipal government; Francesca Binda (Canada), political party expert, currently NDI resident senior director in the West Bank and Gaza; Tova Andrea Wang (USA), electoral reform expert, currently senior democracy fellow at Demos; and Jeffrey England (USA), NDI resident director in Morocco.

During their stay, the delegates met in Rabat with representatives of political parties; officials of the Ministry of Interior; officials of the National Human Rights Council (CNDH), charged with coordinating observer accreditation; other government officials; civic leaders; citizen observers; media and representatives of the international community. Delegation members also traveled to Fez and Casablanca to meet with local government representatives, observers, candidates, political party leaders and other activists.

The pre-election assessment is part of NDI's overall international election observation mission. In late October, NDI intends to field a team of 10 long-term observers who will continue to observe the pre-electoral period (including voter list review, candidate registration and the campaign period), polling day and the immediate post-election period across the country. In addition, an international delegation of approximately 30 people will visit Morocco for the week surrounding election day. That delegation will deploy around the country to observe the final days of the campaign period, the polling process, counting, tabulation and the announcement of results.

The delegation neither seeks to interfere in the election process, nor to render a final assessment of the election process. All aspects of the assessment were conducted in accordance with Moroccan law and international standards for election observation set forth in the Declaration of Principles for International Election Observation. All recommendations are offered in the hope of supporting and strengthening the democratic reform process that Moroccans have undertaken themselves.

NDI and the pre-election delegation appreciate the hospitality, openness and frankness all those who participated in the assessment. In particular, the delegation wishes to express gratitude to the CNDH for their invitation to observe this important process.

Executive Summary

Legislative elections now scheduled in Morocco for November 25, 2011 come nearly one year earlier than regularly planned. This year, Morocco has witnessed popular protests demanding an increase in power-sharing among government institutions and an end to widely perceived corruption and nepotism within the ruling class. In response, a referendum was organized in July, introducing a revised constitution for the country. A large package of laws governing the campaign and elections processes was also quickly enacted, though some of those laws have yet to be finalized. Many Moroccans view the electoral process as a first test of the new constitution, the spirit with which it will be interpreted and how it will be implemented.

Despite the shortened timeframe, the current electoral environment is marked by a number of positive factors. Perhaps most notable is the enactment of a legal framework for observation by domestic and international organizations, which codifies a right provided in the new constitution. Most actors indicated that the election administration at the national level appears technically sound and professional. In addition, changes to voter identification requirements (instead of needing to present a special voter card, voters can now simply show the national identity card) are perceived as a positive development to ease the voting process. Despite some inherent limitations, political parties recognize that citizens, and particularly youth, are looking to parties for change, and party leaders acknowledge the need to address citizens' aspirations and concerns in their campaigns and platforms.

These positive elements, however, exist in the context of a continuing crisis in confidence in Moroccan political institutions and systems of governance. This crisis manifested itself as early as 2007, when turnout in the last legislative elections reached a historic low of 37 percent, and has continued in the form of ongoing public demonstrations. Leaders universally recognize the risk of low voter turnout, acknowledging the sense that the public is not satisfied with developments to date and that low turnout could jeopardize the legitimacy of the new parliament and the reform process itself. Many activists, and even party leaders themselves, say that citizens still do not perceive the political parties as vehicles for change, exacerbating apprehension that the election will be met with apathy. Broad concerns remain over the neutrality of election administration at the local level. Without any significant changes to a complex electoral system and disproportionate districting, it is likely that a splintered legislature will again be voted in and some major parties will, as in previous elections, win fewer seats than their total share of the popular vote.

Instilling confidence among voters and the broader citizenry in the integrity of the process and institutions will be the most important challenge during this electoral process. The task will fall to election authorities to impartially and vigorously apply relevant regulatory laws, political parties to demonstrate responsiveness to the people's aspirations in their campaign programs and candidate choices, and civil society to provide oversight and help connect citizens to the electoral process. Given the shorter-than-expected preparatory timeframes, Moroccan authorities need to demonstrate flexibility in developing regulations and ensure clarity and broad efforts to communicate the rules and procedures. As the Moroccan people look toward a new legislature and government to implement provisions of the revised constitution and address issues of critical importance to them, they need to be assured of the will of political leaders to be responsive and responsible.

The Electoral Context

A complete assessment of any election must consider all aspects of the electoral process: the legal framework regulating elections, election observation, political parties and the media; the political environment before and during the campaign; voting and counting procedures; tabulation and announcement of results; mechanisms for complaints and their resolution; and implementation of the election results. Analysis must draw on information from the pre-election period, election day and the immediate post-election period.

In the context of the Morocco's recent constitutional and electoral reforms, an assessment of the election must also take into account the political environment in which reforms were initiated and the degree to which the election process will be able to respond to – and will be perceived to respond to – Moroccans' expectations and aspirations. Indeed, the electoral process may be seen as a first test of Morocco's new constitution and the spirit with which it will be interpreted and implemented.

Leading into the 2007 parliamentary elections – the first observed by an independent international delegation – Morocco had undergone a decade of significant change as the country explored greater political and social openness within the framework of a centralized monarchy. In general, NDI's international observation report in 2007 noted that voting day on September 7 for the chamber of representatives was conducted in an orderly and transparent manner. However, low voter turnout (37 percent) and a high rate of blank, spoiled or protest ballots (19 percent) indicated that the Moroccan political system had not yet overcome the challenge of inspiring voters and voter confidence in legislative institutions, elected officials, candidates and parties. In the 2009 municipal elections, stronger turnout rates (52 percent) and further professionalization of the election administration signaled a step forward. At the same time, a high rate of complaints (the equivalent of eight for every 100 voters) and invalid votes signaled that underlying issues had not been addressed. The October 2009 indirect elections for one third of the chamber of councilors revealed further discontent among and within political parties, including allegations of fraud and partiality on the part of the administration.

As neighboring Tunisians, Egyptians and Libyans took to the streets during the Arab Spring, young Moroccan organizers rallied crowds across the country in unprecedented, simultaneous street protests demanding an increase in power-sharing and an end to corruption and nepotism within the ruling class. In response to the February 20 Movement – which took its name from the first day of protests – and their continued demonstrations, on March 9 King Mohamed VI announced the formation of a committee tasked with proposing amendments to the Moroccan constitution. On July 1, less than four months later, 73 percent of Moroccans reportedly turned out for the referendum and more than 98 percent of those voted in favor of the new constitution.

Despite the overwhelming result in favor of the new constitution, the vote was also marked by continuing debates between political interests over whether the constitutional amendments were sufficient to bring about real change. Many groups pointed to significant improvements, including the guarantee to name the Prime Minister from the party which holds the most parliamentary seats, the Prime Minister's expanded power to name senior civil servants, the pursuit of "parity" between men and women, and the recognition of Amazigh, the language of the country's indigenous Berber, as an official language. However, some Moroccans also expressed concern that the referendum campaign period was yet another example of what they perceive as an unfair playing field, as supporters of the constitution had access to state resources and assistance from religious authority to lock in the overwhelming approval.

In mid-July, the Ministry of Interior initiated discussions about the date for early elections as a necessary next step following constitutional reform. Following a series of consultations with political parties, November 25, 2011 was announced as the polling date. Meanwhile, political parties, civic groups and other interested parties turned their attention to reviewing and seeking to make their voices heard on the package of revised electoral laws, including the laws on the chamber of representatives, political parties, observation, electoral districting and the electoral list, all of which were presented to party leaders in draft form by the Ministry of Interior. While broad agreement was reached on the need for elections earlier than the regularly scheduled October 2012 date, the November 25 date left little time for meaningful discussion, review, consultation and input into the various pieces of legislation.

This process of review of the electoral legislation was critical; it was the first test of whether the parliament and parties could and would reach their potential to play a more meaningful role as provided in the new constitution. The electoral framework content was equally important; decisions about the electoral system, districting, political party regulation and observation will determine whether the forthcoming elections will result in a parliament that will look and be able to act differently. At this stage, however, not all legislation, decrees or related regulations have been clarified, finalized or publicized.

Some of the specific aspects of the electoral context for the 2011 parliamentary elections are discussed below.

Electoral Framework: Following the constitutional referendum, the Ministry of Interior presented political party leaders with hard copies of the initial package of draft revised laws in mid-July, including the laws on the chamber of representatives, political parties and observation. After the Ministry shared the draft laws, a series of discussions between the administration and political parties took place. Political parties were able to offer input and suggestions on the legal framework during this period, though there was a relatively short amount of time to review the drafts and provide input given the volume and scope of the legislation. For civil society, party members and other actors, the reform of the framework seemed to take place through closed-door discussions with no opportunity for outside input. Little debate took place in either of the chambers of parliament; in fact, less than one quarter of the elected members in the lower house attended sessions when voting on the legislation took place. While the resulting laws do provide for some changes to the electoral framework, the legislative process raised concern and reinforced public perceptions that the way in which decisions were made was business as usual.

The 2011 revisions maintain the same proportional representation, largest remainder system both for multi-member districts and a national list as existed in 2007.¹ The minimum threshold to take seats in the parliament for the district lists was maintained at six percent while the threshold for the national list was decreased to three percent at the request of smaller parties. While NDI heard differing views on the threshold, no one with whom NDI met expressed strong feelings about the thresholds on either lists. This system inherently creates splintered legislatures given the number of parties because it is virtually impossible to win more than one seat in a district. The complexity of the allocation of votes and the fact that it produces outcomes other than those expected also seems to lead to misunderstandings and suspicions among citizens and party officials.

Candidate Lists: Recognition of parity among men and women in the new constitution is a strong step for ensuring women's participation, in political processes and more broadly across Moroccan society. While the national list had been reserved exclusively for women since its introduction in 2002 on the basis of an informal agreement among political parties, the new electoral law codifies the reservation for women. Though the law reserves 60 seats exclusively for women on a separate national list, many women activists expressed disappointment at this outcome; with the increase in the number of seats overall, the law only increases women's representation from 9 percent to approximately 15 percent of the legislature – not the parity some women's organizations were originally seeking or even the one third or one quarter quotas that were subsequently suggested. Moreover, many women would have preferred that the full 90 seats of the national list be reserved for women. However, the new electoral law also provides for the inclusion of 30 male youth seats on the national list.² Although encouraging the participation of youth in politics is a positive step to address many of the concerns raised during the February 20 protests, women's groups have questioned whether limiting the youth seats only to men respects the letter and spirit of pursuing gender parity guaranteed by the constitution.

The electoral system also seems to significantly impact the internal party nomination process for district-level lists. Knowing that most parties will only win one seat per district, parties can only afford to put their most popular candidate – often someone with financial means and/or a high public profile – as the first person on the list. This presents a dilemma for parties that wish to respond to the almost universal demand among the politically active and civil society for change and “new faces” in politics, but that understand that often the incumbents under the given system are better poised to take the only seat the party will be able to secure. While most voters choose according to the party symbol, it is widely known they are essentially voting for the candidate in the first spot. This seems to continue to create a barrier for women and youth participation on district lists, as well as for allowing for new, non-incumbent candidates.

Districting: A redistricting process has been taking place as part of the electoral reform package. Little information is available about how this process was undertaken and whether a set of clear criteria, which had been proposed by some political parties, was applied. In fact, NDI heard from officials at the Ministry of Interior, responsible for administering the elections, that there was no systematic process for determining the delineation of districts relative to population. Moreover, a number of seats and districts appear to have been added without any systematic correlation to changes in population size or demographic breakdown. What is known is that there remains significant variation in the size of the districts throughout the country.

¹ Under the method of largest remainder, seats are effectively distributed in two rounds: first, seats are awarded to parties who have achieved the electoral quota, which is defined according to the Hare method as total votes divided by total seats. The quota is then subtracted from those parties' vote totals. Next, all parties with votes above the legal threshold are awarded seats according to who has the greatest number of votes – or, “largest remainder” – until all seats are allocated. The Moroccan system is a closed-list system, meaning each party fixes the order in which the candidates are listed. See Appendix D of NDI's Final Report on the Moroccan Legislative Elections, September 7, 2007.

² “The slates shall comprise the successive names of two female candidates followed by the name of a male candidate. Leadership of the slate shall be assigned to a female candidature while the age of the male candidates on the list shall not exceed forty years at the time of the election.” (Article 23, Bill Number 27-11 on the Lower Chamber of Parliament)

NDI noted a mixed opinion among the political actors with whom the delegation met concerning the districting issue. While some, particularly in smaller parties, pointed to the advantage given in larger districts to candidates and/or parties with more resources (to the point, it was claimed, that only the wealthy could afford to run in such districts), others noted the potential over-representation of rural votes in many districts, which could skew the election outcomes. Similarly, while smaller parties suggested that large districts would dilute geographically concentrated support, others pointed to the fact that larger districts dissuade corruption and vote buying, as well as strengthen the role of parties over individual candidates.

Nonetheless, based on the information currently available, the significant discrepancies in the number of voters represented by an elected member has not been addressed and disparities of such magnitude effectively value some citizens' votes over others'. In 2007, for example, a seat in the Tiznit province represented 45,373 voters while one in Zagora, within the same geographic area, represented 66,977, a variation of 32 percent.

The importance of consistent district size has been recognized by the Venice Commission's 2002 Code of Good Practice in Electoral Matters: Guidelines and Explanatory Report. The Code, along with other international norms, recommends a discrepancy in district population size no greater than 15 percent: "The permissible departure...should not be more than 10 percent, and should certainly not exceed 15 percent except in special circumstances (protection of a concentrated minority, sparsely populated administrative entity)." The Code emphasizes the importance of basing district delineation and seat distribution on demographic considerations, such as overall population or number of registered voters.³ Although Morocco's districting process is yet to be fully publicized, the discrepancies among some districts far exceed these margins.

The maintenance of the proportional representation, largest remainder system and the districting will likely result, once again, in no party winning a substantial plurality, much less a majority, in the chamber of representatives. In contrast to popular will and the spirit of proportional representation, some major parties are likely, once again, to win fewer seats than their total share of the votes.

Political Parties: With the shortened timeframe to prepare for the elections, parties and some newly emerged coalitions of parties are still in the process of developing their strategies, campaign messages and platforms. In the interim, many parties are attempting to mobilize citizens for voter registration, given the concern they acknowledge over voter participation rates. These are positive indicators. Based on conversations with party representatives from across the political spectrum, parties recognize that citizens are looking to parties for change. Though it is not always clear how campaigns will specifically respond to this demand, party officials acknowledge the need to address citizens' aspirations and concerns in their campaigns and platforms. Related to the public calls for change, most parties acknowledge that youth are an important demographic that needs to be engaged in the political process and in party action.

³ The full text is available here: <http://www.venice.coe.int/docs/2002/CDL-AD%282002%29023rev-e.pdf>

More generally, however, despite adjustments within the revised political party law and some efforts that parties shared with the delegation, there is still the perception among the public that the behavior or approach of most parties has not fundamentally changed. The public points to closed internal mechanisms for choosing candidates, failure to enunciate clear positions or platforms, and failure to engage directly with the citizenry. On an optimistic note, most parties acknowledge this state of perception and the possible impact it could have on voter turnout on election day and express a desire to respond. Given the truncated timeline for these elections, the delegation acknowledges that parties have little opportunity to engage in meaningful and extensive internal party consultations for candidate selection.

Political Party Funding: The delegation was encouraged by reforms to the political party and chamber of representative laws and related decrees that provide increased and clearer regulation of party financing and candidate spending. These include broadening and clarification of state financing for party operations and campaigning, spending limits for candidates and proposals to encourage women's candidacies. They do not, however, expressly limit spending by national-level political parties in campaigns. Ensuring the enforcement of these regulations with seriousness and equity will be critical to building confidence in the legal framework and the neutrality of the state. Further refinement of the framework for financing of campaigns will be important for future elections.

Media Access: The delegation appreciated the opportunity to meet with the Higher Authority for Audiovisual Communication (HACA) and notes the uniqueness of such a regulatory agency in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region, as well as the professionalism it seems to display. While it is commendable that there is oversight of the media by a semi-independent agency and that equitable access to public media is regulated by law, some parties with whom the delegation met believe that the formulas for allocation of air time are to the detriment of parties with limited or no representation in parliament.

The NDI delegation notes that there are no clear criteria or formulae on the allotment of the timing of coverage provided to political parties. Since the HACA acknowledges that they are only mandated to regulate overall access, there are no mechanisms to ensure that parties receive equitable coverage during "prime time" viewing hours or that differences are made among different types of programming related to the elections. The shortcoming on the timing of allocation is compounded by a further weakness, in that the allocation of equitable time is applied to the whole campaign period, rather than on a daily or weekly basis. It is conceivable, therefore, that smaller parties could be allocated all of their – already limited – time at once, at the end of the campaign, during a time of day when viewership is low.

Moreover, since analysis of the level of coverage of the parties is not concluded until after the election, there is no enforcement of the rules that would impact the course of campaigns.

Voter Participation: Overall, the primary concern among virtually all of the actors with whom the delegation met related to the level of voter turnout for the elections. Several times, breaking the 50 percent turnout level was mentioned as a satisfactory (and still challenging) rate. These concerns seem to stem from the experience of the historically low 37 percent rate experienced in 2007, and are reinforced by the sense expressed by many that the public is not encouraged by developments to date. Although widely expressed, the concern over the potential impact of low voter turnout had various interpretations. Some said turnout would determine the legitimacy of the overall reform process, others that it would establish the credibility of the new parliament and the likelihood of continued discontent, which could, in fact, be further inflamed. Although the information is anecdotal, there is a widespread perception that election campaigns are fraught with corruption; negative perceptions about the integrity of the system can also lead to cynicism toward the efficacy of the political system as a whole and, hence, to voter apathy.

Election Administration: Under the revised electoral framework, the Ministry of Interior remains the body responsible for administering the elections. Almost all actors indicated that the election administration at the national level is technically sound and professional. It is noteworthy that the reform of the voter list administrative committees, in which judges are now placed in charge of collection and review of voter lists, was seen as a positive sign by virtually all parties and actors. The elimination of presenting a special voter card in favor of using the national identity card is perceived as a positive development, as there was some confusion over the distribution of voting cards in the past. Similarly, the outreach efforts to encourage eligible citizens to register to vote are taken as encouraging signs.

While distinctions were made between the operation of election authorities at the national and local levels, many people with whom NDI met remain skeptical that the Ministry would remain neutral. For their part, Ministry officials with whom the delegation met seem to see themselves as implementers of the law with no flexibility to create supporting regulations or to interpret the legal framework where there are ambiguities. Decisions and interpretations inevitably need to be made in election processes.

Having an independent election commission empowered to interpret and regulate the election legal framework solves this. The establishment of independent electoral bodies has become a common trait of elections around the world. In some countries, commissions play a role in advising the Ministry of Interior on election administration or even taking over management responsibility. Based on their ability to act as unbiased administrators among political parties, candidates and observers on behalf of citizens, independent electoral commissions can help to increase public confidence in the integrity and transparency of the process.

Voters' List: The voters' list for the 2011 elections is based on a 1992 voters' register that has been updated and revised periodically. The Ministry of Interior opened a voter registration process in late September that will last through October 27, and has expressed a commitment to removing names of people who have died or are no longer eligible to vote before the November 25 election. As noted, the outreach effort by parties and the Moroccan authorities to encourage voter registration is a positive sign.

The new voter registry law charges the Ministry with eliminating duplicate names on the list. Clarifications should be made to ensure that criteria beyond a voter's name are being used to determine if a voter is registered twice. It would also appear under the language of the law that voters who were already registered to vote and whose national identity card was not listed on their registration now need to re-register to vote.⁴ This should be clarified or addressed.

⁴ Per provisions 12.2 in Chapter III and 5.4 in Chapter II of the Bill Number 36-11 on Renewing and Computer Processing of the Definitive General Voters' Lists in View of Their Updating.

Information about a process to check the list or appeal any mistakes or rejections is similarly unclear, as is the specific timeline for each phase of this process, including complaints and appeals. This is particularly problematic given the shortened timeline of these particular elections and a number of national and religious holidays that could affect administrative processes. Even if elucidated in the law, these elements remain unclear to the public and political parties, which will limit their ability to review and register complaints regarding errors. It is anticipated that the final voters' list will be published only days before the election, leading to potential confusion on election day and possibly even some undue disenfranchisement of legitimate voters. Civic groups and political parties have noted that this is particularly concerning given the requirement for both candidates and domestic observers to be on the voters' list to participate in the elections appropriately.

Unusually, the delegation heard concerns from political parties and civic groups over the high number of polling places – approximately 40,000 – and the potential for that to hinder effective election observation. At the same time, having many polling places eases access to the polls for voters. It must be determined how these polling place locations have been allocated relative to the population to make any further findings.

Voter Education: Voter education and mobilization efforts in 2007 were significant, with campaigns by the election authorities and public-private partnerships reaching across the nation to encourage voters to register and participate, as well as providing information about how to vote. At the moment, it is unclear to the delegation the level or effort of voter education that will take place before voting, particularly in light of the shortened preparatory timeframe. The delegation heard of no significant initiatives underway or in preparation. Effective voter education cannot be limited only to the process for election day. Information about the registration process seems to have been disseminated widely; information about the other regulatory and procedural aspects of the elections is equally relevant to voters, political parties and observers. Given the shortened timeline, some regulations are necessarily still being determined. However, the Moroccan authorities can build further confidence in the process by ensuring that information is released in a systematic and timely manner.

With the high spoilage rates for ballots experienced in 2007, recommendations were made by international observers to redesign the ballot and test it with voters. Despite the recommendation, election authorities indicated that the ballots will remain the same as they were in that election and discussion of any change seems to have been limited at best. However, those rates suggest that there is a real need for voters and polling officials to understand the rules and regulations of the voting procedure and, more specifically, the ballot.

Recommendations

In the spirit of international cooperation and of the democratic values we share, the delegation respectfully offers the following recommendations:

1. Authorities responsible for coordinating observation and accrediting organizations and individual observers should clarify criteria, timelines and other vague elements in regulations. This information should be disseminated widely and in a timely manner, and polling officials should be well educated on the rights and responsibilities of observers. Further, the authorities should demonstrate flexibility as domestic and international observers tackle practical challenges in deploying within such a short timeframe.
2. The Moroccan authorities should enforce, in an even-handed and impartial manner, all the rules regarding campaigns, including the prohibition on vote buying, the prohibition on the use of public resources or religious institutions for campaigning, and campaign finance regulations. Authorities should strive to ensure that the entire election process takes place in a peaceful environment free of violence or intimidation.

might field upwards of 400 observers. International groups might include NDI, the European Union, the Arab League and others.

3. Efforts should be made by the authorities to clarify elements of the legal framework on voter lists, as well as ensure that voters, political parties and civil society are able to check the information and file complaints that will be adjudicated in a timely and efficient manner before election day.
4. Final vote tallies should be made available publicly immediately upon their tabulation, including both aggregated totals and disaggregated tallies by polling station.
5. The practice of burning valid ballots immediately after vote counting should be discontinued in light of international norms and best practices for dispute resolution. Similarly, election authorities should continue to make all efforts to ensure the security of unused ballots.
6. Moroccan civil society itself should be sure to monitor the electoral process more broadly than just election day, covering the campaign period and endeavoring to cover areas outside of urban regions.
7. Parties should strive to earn the trust of voters through responsive platforms and voter outreach efforts, and give consideration on how to maximize the involvement of new participants, youth and women within campaigns and as candidates.
8. Over the longer term, and perhaps with an eye to early municipal elections in spring 2012, Moroccan authorities should consider revisions to the electoral system, as well as to districting, to aim for greater equality of districts based on internationally recognized criteria. Further, media regulations, campaign finance rules and other regulatory laws should be reviewed, clarified and strengthened.
9. Importantly, future reform initiatives should provide time and opportunity for more inclusive and public consultation with political parties, civil society and citizens themselves.

Contacts

For further information, please contact: in Rabat, Susan Stigant at + 212 537 671 619/26; in Washington, DC, Andrew Farrand at + 1 202 728 5500.

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Wednesday, August 03, 2011 11:48 AM
To: 'Noorulain Khawaja'
Subject: INTERVIEW OPPORTUNITY: Jawad Kerdoudi, Moroccan Institute of International Relations

Hi Noorulain –
A bit more forward planning this time!

I wanted to let you know that the president of the Moroccan Institute of International Relations (IMRI), Jawad Kerdoudi, will be in DC from August 10-17. In addition to his executive position at IMRI, Jawad Kerdoudi teaches international trade at graduate level in Rabat and Casablanca. He is the author of several books on Moroccan external trade, on the Spanish model in addition to regular articles and commentaries in the Moroccan media.

As I'm sure you know there will be a vote in Morocco soon after Ramadan following the decision to move ahead with pro-democratic reforms.
I'm sure Mr Kerdoudi could provide a unique view of the reform movement and current events in Morocco.

Please let me know if you are interested in speaking with him and I would be happy to make the arrangements.

Best regards,

Sara Parker
202-479-7145

From: Noorulain Khawaja [mailto:noorulain.khawaja@aljazeera.net]
Sent: Tuesday, July 12, 2011 12:18 PM
To: Sara Parker
Subject: RE: Morocco voted for reform - what's next?

Unfortunately, this won't work. Hopefully next time he's in the States we can arrange something.

From: Sara Parker [mailto:sara.parker@grayling.com]
Sent: Tuesday, July 12, 2011 12:14
To: Noorulain Khawaja
Subject: Re: Morocco voted for reform - what's next?

Good morning-
Driss El Yazami could meet with you tomorrow from 2:30-3:00.

He will be between meetings in downtown DC.
Is it possible for you to come to him. I'm afraid if we have to bring him to your studio

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, May 20, 2011 3:49 PM
To: 'maha.atal@gmail.com'
Subject: News from N. Africa: Mbarka Bouaida - young, female and a member of the Moroccan Parliament

Hi Maha!

I have been reading your writing in Forbes and on Instant Cappuccino and hope that you would be interested in a female voice from N. Africa visiting the US to promote entrepreneurship.

A delegation from the Kingdom of Morocco will be attending the closing bell ceremony at the NASDAQ on Thursday, May 26. In the delegation is a woman named Mbarka Bouaida who was elected in 2007 as the youngest member of the Moroccan Parliament.

A Moroccan of Sahrawi origin, she is a member of the National Council of the National Rally for Independents (RNI), which forms a part of the current Moroccan governmental coalition. She was the Chair of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, National Defense and Religious Affairs, after serving two years as Vice-Chair of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. She also represents Morocco in the Euro-Mediterranean Parliamentary Assembly. After completing her studies in financial management in Casablanca, Ms. Bouaida received her Master's in Marketing and Communication from the Université de Toulouse in France and her Master's in Business Administration from Greenwich University in Great Britain.

Ms. Bouaida speaks French, Arabic, English and Spanish fluently and is well versed on women's issues, youth issues and entrepreneurship in the Islamic world. She offers a unique view from North Africa at a time when the region is undergoing dramatic change.

I would be delighted to arrange an interview with Ms. Bouaida for you. Traveling with her is Soraya Badraoui, President of the Moroccan Women's Entrepreneurship Association who is also available for interviews. They are in New York next week and available on May 25 and 27 - please let me know if you are interested in meeting Mbarka Bouaida and/or Soraya Badraoui.

Thank you
Sara Parker

Sara Parker
Senior Vice President

Director, Policy and Outreach

202-479-7145

Skype: sara.parker.grayling

www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, October 25, 2011 12:34 PM
To: 'ljenkins@npr.org'
Subject: Interview Opportunity: Moroccan Woman's Rights Advocate in DC

Hi Loren-

As you know the elections are fast approaching in Morocco and I wanted to let you know about a unique interview opportunity.

Zineb El Adaoui is one of the most powerful women in charge of economic accountability and governance in Morocco and is visiting DC to attend the International Women's Forum.

Ms. El Adaoui is an advocate of ethics, open access in government and a leading figure in the Moroccan women's movement. She has been outspoken on the topic of reform and the campaign to introduce positive change in Morocco - long before the February 20 Movement.

Ms. El Adaoui is currently the Présidente de la Cour régionale des comptes (regional GAO) de Rabat (and Kenitra), whose mission is to independently audit and control management and accounting of regional public funding. In auditing elected officials, her office enforces accountability, transparency and good governance. Since 2010, for the first time, each of the nine regional "cours des comptes" have been mandated to audit the personal finances of regional leaders having access to government funds.

As one of three women appointed by the King to the Advisory Commission on Morocco's "Regionalisation," Ms. El Adaoui is passionate about Morocco's progress during this historic time. Her role as a woman leader and international figure gives Ms. El Adaoui a unique perspective that she is eager to share.

If you are interested in speaking with her I would be happy to arrange an interview next week.

thank you

Sara

434-851-8762

sara parker
senior vice president
202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, October 04, 2011 3:17 PM
To: 'lkassenaar@bloomberg.net'
Subject: INTERVIEW OPPORTUNITY: Mbarka Bouaida - young, female member of Moroccan Parliament

Hi Lisa,

Sincere apologies for the late notice.

A delegation from the Kingdom of Morocco is in New York and includes a young woman named Mbarka Bouaida who was elected in 2007 as the youngest member of The Moroccan Parliament.

A Moroccan of Sahrawi origin, she is a member of the National Council of the National Rally for Independents (RNI), which forms a part of the current Moroccan governmental coalition. She was the Chair of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, National Defense and Religious Affairs, after serving two years as Vice-Chair of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. She also represents Morocco in the Euro-Mediterranean Parliamentary Assembly. After completing her studies in financial management in Casablanca, Ms. Bouaida received her Master's in Marketing and Communication from the Université de Toulouse in France and her Master's in Business Administration from Greenwich University in Great Britain.

Ms. Bouaida speaks French, Arabic, English and Spanish fluently and is well versed on women's issues, youth issues and entrepreneurship in the Islamic world. She offers a unique view from North Africa at a time when the region is undergoing dramatic change.

She is available for interviews tomorrow and I would be delighted to arrange an interview with her for you or any of your colleagues - please let me know if you are interested in meeting Mbarka.

You can reach me on email as above or on 434-851-8762.

Thank you
Sara

sara parker
senior vice president
202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, July 01, 2011 10:29 AM
To: 'Daniel.Dombey@FT.COM'
Subject: Morocco Votes

Dear Daniel-

Moroccans are casting their votes this weekend in an historic referendum on Constitutional reforms. The reforms were announced on June 17 by His Majesty King Mohammed VI and are designed to strengthen Morocco's democratic institutions and establish it as a constitutional monarchy.

In addition to voting across Morocco, polling stations will be open worldwide at embassies, consulates, and other centers to allow Moroccan voters living abroad to participate. In the U.S., twelve polling stations will be open, from July 1-3, in Boston, Chicago, Houston, Los Angeles, New York City, Orlando and in the Washington, DC area.

If you are planning to cover the voting in Morocco and abroad and would like to speak directly with a source on the events in Morocco and their thoughts on the impact of the reforms we would be happy to facilitate a conversation.

Included below are the names of interview candidates we can offer. Please let us know if we can be of assistance.

Thank you.

Sara
434-851-8762

Ed Gabriel

Former U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco

Anouar Boukhars

Assistant Professor of Political Science and International Studies at McDaniel College and a former visiting fellow with the Brookings Doha Center

Driss Tamsamani

Executive with Citigroup, author and producer as well as Founder and President of SOS Morocco

Hassan Samrhouni

A leader of the Moroccan-American community

Adil Naji

President and Founder of Arabesque, Inc. a Design and Interior Decoration firm that specializes in Moorish Architecture

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, July 08, 2011 11:05 AM
To: 'Daniel.Dombey@FT.COM'
Subject: Morocco voted for reform - what's next?
Attachments: Driss El Yazami_bio.pdf

Hi Daniel -

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazami President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami are as below and attached for your reference.

He is available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you
Sara Parker

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, July 08, 2011 11:34 AM
To: 'damos@npr.org'
Subject: Morocco voted for reform - what's next?
Attachments: Driss El Yazami_bio.pdf

Hi Deborah-

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what's next?

Driss El Yazami President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami are as below and attached for your reference.

He is available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you
Sara Parker

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Wednesday, August 03, 2011 11:35 AM
To: 'ccastiel@voanews.com'
Subject: INTERVIEW OPPORTUNITY: Moroccan Institute of International Relations (IMRI), Jawad Kerdoudi in DC

Hi Carol –

I loved the interview you did with Leila Hanfi speaking about Morocco. As I'm sure you know there will be a vote in Morocco soon after Ramadan following the decision to move ahead with pro-democratic reforms.

I wanted to let you know that the president of the Moroccan Institute of International Relations (IMRI), Jawad Kerdoudi, will be in DC from August 10-17. In addition to his executive position at IMRI, Jawad Kerdoudi teaches international trade at graduate level in Rabat and Casablanca. He is the author of several books on Moroccan external trade, on the Spanish model in addition to regular articles and commentaries in the Moroccan media.

I'm sure Mr Kerdoudi could provide a unique view of the reform movement and current events in Morocco.

Please let me know if you are interested in speaking with him and I would be happy to make the arrangements.

Best regards,

Sara Parker
202-479-7145

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, May 20, 2011 3:27 PM
To: 'barden@bloomberg.net'
Subject: News from N. Africa: Mbarka Bouaida - young, female and a member of the Moroccan Parliament

Hi Andrew

Apologies if you aren't the correct contact for this email.

A delegation from the Kingdom of Morocco will be attending the closing bell ceremony at the NASDAQ on Thursday, May 26. In the delegation is a woman named Mbarka Bouaida who was elected in 2007 as the youngest member of the Moroccan Parliament.

A Moroccan of Sahrawi origin, she is a member of the National Council of the National Rally for Independents (RNI), which forms a part of the current Moroccan governmental coalition. She was the Chair of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, National Defense and Religious Affairs, after serving two years as Vice-Chair of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. She also represents Morocco in the Euro-Mediterranean Parliamentary Assembly. After completing her studies in financial management in Casablanca, Ms. Bouaida received her Master's in Marketing and Communication from the Université de Toulouse in France and her Master's in Business Administration from Greenwich University in Great Britain.

Ms. Bouaida speaks French, Arabic, English and Spanish fluently and is well versed on women's issues, youth issues and entrepreneurship in the Islamic world. She offers a unique view from North Africa at a time when the region is undergoing dramatic change.

I would be delighted to arrange an interview with Ms. Bouaida for you or any of your reporters. She is in New York next week and available on May 25 and 27 - please let me know if you are interested in meeting Mbarka.

Thank you
Sara Parker

Sara Parker
Senior Vice President
202-479-7145
Skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, May 24, 2011 12:14 PM
To: 'Abby Ellin'
Subject: RE: Morocco: Mbarka Boudia

In September Morocco will be in the midst of a political reform movement unlike anything in the Islamic world and certainly extraordinary from a monarchy. For your reference here is a clip from the Foreign Minister's recent speech at Brookings:

http://www.brookings.edu/events/2011/0323_morocco.aspx

Do you think this has women's mag appeal?
Forbes Women does some fantastic Middle East coverage do you ever write for them?
Love to hear your thoughts on this!

Mbarka is available on Thursday afternoon and on Friday – I know that this is a tough weekend and the timing is tight but let me know!
I'm around all day

Thanks!

Sara Parker
Senior Vice President
E: Sara.Parker@Grayling.com
202-479-7145
Skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

From: Abby Ellin [mailto:aellin123@verizon.net]
Sent: Monday, May 23, 2011 1:16 PM
To: Sara Parker
Subject: Re: Morocco: Mbarka Boudia

Ok, I think I need more deets--but maybe I should just meet with her? Right now not sure how to pitch. Women's mags have three month lead times, so is something going on in Sept, say, with her?

On May 22, 2011, at 5:15 PM, Sara Parker wrote:

I think the story is what does the Arab Spring mean for women and youth in the Islamic World. Morocco is also undergoing a process of regionalization - does this mean more opportunity for women?

I was surprised and delighted to learn about Mbarka's role in Morocco - it is so rare to hear from young women in that part of the world and their perspective, especially with the climate of recent months, needs a bigger audience.

Sally Howard

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Sunday, December 11, 2011 3:02 AM
To: Sally Howard
Subject: FW: Change in Morocco - Interview opportunities.

-----Original Message-----

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Fri 7/8/2011 2:12 PM
To: paul.feldman@latimes.com
Subject: Change in Morocco - Interview opportunities.

Hi Paul,

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazimi, President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council and Leila Hanafi an international lawyer, at the World Justice Project will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami and Leila Hanafi are as below for your reference.

They are both available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you

Colin

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Leila Hanafi

Leila Hanafi is an international lawyer, currently working as Staff Attorney and Programs Manager at the World Justice Project, in Washington, D.C. She previously held a number of positions at the World Bank. As one of the Bank's youngest professionals, Leila worked on operations, finance, poverty reduction, and legal reform. She won the highly competitive World Bank Middle East and North Africa Innovation Fund Prize, through which she led a legal empowerment initiative for young Moroccan women. Leila serves on the Board of several organizations in the field of international law and development, including the United Nations Association YPIC, the Moroccan-American Legal Empowerment Network, and the Moroccan Center of International Mediation and Arbitration. She has also published several academic papers and articles on the legal systems of North Africa, which have been profiled in national and international media outlets. A strong advocate of the rule of law throughout her life, Leila has organized and presented at several international forums and at high-level World Bank and United Nations meetings, advocating for young people's legal rights and representing the young face of development. She is an honors graduate of American University's School of International Service and Georgetown University, and currently pursuing post-graduate studies in international law at George Washington University Law School.

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkoworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Sally Howard

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Sunday, December 11, 2011 3:02 AM
To: Sally Howard
Subject: FW: German Marshall Fund meeting - Interview opportunities

-----Original Message-----

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Fri 7/8/2011 2:13 PM
To: ufriedman@theatlantic.com
Subject: German Marshall Fund meeting - Interview opportunities

Hi Uri,

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazami, President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council and Leila Hanafi an international lawyer, at the World Justice Project will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami and Leila Hanafi are as below for your reference.

They are both available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you

Colin

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Leila Hanafi

Leila Hanafi is an international lawyer, currently working as Staff Attorney and Programs Manager at the World Justice Project, in Washington, D.C. She previously held a number of positions at the World Bank. As one of the Bank's youngest professionals, Leila worked on operations, finance, poverty reduction, and legal reform. She won the highly competitive World Bank Middle East and North Africa Innovation Fund Prize, through which she led a legal empowerment initiative for young Moroccan women. Leila serves on the Board of several organizations in the field of international law and development, including the United Nations Association YPIC, the Moroccan-American Legal Empowerment Network, and the Moroccan Center of International Mediation and Arbitration. She has also published several academic papers and articles on the legal systems of North Africa, which have been profiled in national and international media outlets. A strong advocate of the rule of law throughout her life, Leila has organized and presented at several international forums and at high-level World Bank and United Nations meetings, advocating for young people's legal rights and representing the young face of development. She is an honors graduate of American University's School of International Service and Georgetown University, and currently pursuing post-graduate studies in international law at George Washington University Law School.

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkowworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkoworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Sally Howard

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Sunday, December 11, 2011 3:01 AM
To: Sally Howard
Subject: FW: German Marshall Fund Event - Interview opportunities.

-----Original Message-----

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Fri 7/8/2011 2:15 PM
To: cara@huffingtonpost.com
Subject: German Marshall Fund Event - Interview opportunities.

Hi Cara,

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazimi, President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council and Leila Hanafi an international lawyer, at the World Justice Project will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami and Leila Hanafi are as below for your reference.

They are both available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you

Colin

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Leila Hanafi

Leila Hanafi is an international lawyer, currently working as Staff Attorney and Programs Manager at the World Justice Project, in Washington, D.C. She previously held a number of positions at the World Bank. As one of the Bank's youngest professionals, Leila worked on operations, finance, poverty reduction, and legal reform. She won the highly competitive World Bank Middle East and North Africa Innovation Fund Prize, through which she led a legal empowerment initiative for young Moroccan women. Leila serves on the Board of several organizations in the field of international law and development, including the United Nations Association YPIC, the Moroccan-American Legal Empowerment Network, and the Moroccan Center of International Mediation and Arbitration. She has also published several academic papers and articles on the legal systems of North Africa, which have been profiled in national and international media outlets. A strong advocate of the rule of law throughout her life, Leila has organized and presented at several international forums and at high-level World Bank and United Nations meetings, advocating for young people's legal rights and representing the young face of development. She is an honors graduate of American University's School of International Service and Georgetown University, and currently pursuing post-graduate studies in international law at George Washington University Law School.

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkoworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Sally Howard

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Sunday, December 11, 2011 3:01 AM
To: Sally Howard
Subject: FW: The Future of Morocco - Interview opportunities

-----Original Message-----

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Fri 7/8/2011 2:11 PM
To: barden@bloomberg.net
Subject: The Future of Morocco - Interview opportunities

Hi Andrew

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazami, President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council and Leila Hanafi an international lawyer, at the World Justice Project will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami and Leila Hanafi are as below for your reference.

They are both available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you

Colin

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Leila Hanafi

Leila Hanafi is an international lawyer, currently working as Staff Attorney and Programs Manager at the World Justice Project, in Washington, D.C. She previously held a number of positions at the World Bank. As one of the Bank's youngest professionals, Leila worked on operations, finance, poverty reduction, and legal reform. She won the highly competitive World Bank Middle East and North Africa Innovation Fund Prize, through which she led a legal empowerment initiative for young Moroccan women. Leila serves on the Board of several organizations in the field of international law and development, including the United Nations Association YPIC, the Moroccan-American Legal Empowerment Network, and the Moroccan Center of International Mediation and Arbitration. She has also published several academic papers and articles on the legal systems of North Africa, which have been profiled in national and international media outlets. A strong advocate of the rule of law throughout her life, Leila has organized and presented at several international forums and at high-level World Bank and United Nations meetings, advocating for young people's legal rights and representing the young face of development. She is an honors graduate of American University's School of International Service and Georgetown University, and currently pursuing post-graduate studies in international law at George Washington University Law School.

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkoworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Information about a process to check the list or appeal any mistakes or rejections is similarly unclear, as is the specific timeline for each phase of this process, including complaints and appeals. This is particularly problematic given the shortened timeline of these particular elections and a number of national and religious holidays that could affect administrative processes. Even if elucidated in the law, these elements remain unclear to the public and political parties, which will limit their ability to review and register complaints regarding errors. It is anticipated that the final voters' list will be published only days before the election, leading to potential confusion on election day and possibly even some undue disenfranchisement of legitimate voters. Civic groups and political parties have noted that this is particularly concerning given the requirement for both candidates and domestic observers to be on the voters' list to participate in the elections appropriately.

Transparency of Vote Counting: During its 2007 observation, NDI noted a number of issues related to the vote count, including the provision to burn all valid ballots immediately following the vote count, the handling of unused ballots, simplification of the ballot design for quicker counting and the release of results down to the polling station level. No apparent effort has been made to address these concerns.

Election Observation: A hallmark of the revised constitution in Morocco now is the enshrinement of conformity with international standards for the observation of electoral processes, which was codified, as recommended by international observers in 2007, as the first electoral text legislated.⁵ The new law outlines the provisions for independent and impartial observation by Moroccan national institutions, civil society associations and foreign non-governmental organizations. This is an important development in Morocco's electoral framework and provides a foundational guarantee for citizen and international observers.

While the Election Observers Accreditation Committee was established in early October under the coordination of the National Council for Human Rights (CNDH), and the CNDH has demonstrated seriousness and professionalism with its election responsibilities, the specific regulations and procedures to accredit observers were released with only a one-time, ten-day submission deadline for applications. Based on discussions with officials and domestic observer groups, the criteria for acceptance remains unclear and perhaps subjective. While it is understandable that the Committee requires time to review the applications and process accreditation, ten days is a short timeline for registration. Furthermore, no information is available about the process for appeals should applications for organizations or specific observers be denied or whether the calendar allows for a timely appeals process. In addition, no provisions are apparent to allow for replacement of observers who might be sick or otherwise unable to observe on election day, which will be almost one month after the application deadline. The CNDH indicated in meetings with the delegation that it will strictly adhere to the rule that no changes to the list of individual observers can be made after October 28, presenting a tremendous practical challenge to both domestic and international observation groups.⁶ Given the short electoral calendar and the challenge of implementing brand new regulations, information needs to be clear, timely and widely disseminated.

⁵ Bill Number 30-11 to Determine the Requirements and Modalities for Independent and Impartial Election Observation. See also Article 11 of Constitution of the Kingdom of Morocco.

⁶ Based on information available and depending on the accreditation results, it is expected that the Collectif Associatif pour l'Observation des Elections, a national coalition of civil society organizations that have observed elections since 2002, would field 3,000 domestic observers, the CNDH would field 240 of its own observers, and various other domestic groups

Sally Howard

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Sunday, December 11, 2011 2:56 AM
To: Sally Howard
Subject: FW: Your story on Morocco.

-----Original Message-----

From: Colin Judd
Sent: Fri 7/1/2011 1:10 PM
To: mfisher@theatlantic.com
Subject: Your story on Morocco.

Hi Max,

One of those small world moments. I've been working with the Moroccan American Policy Center here in Washington for a couple of months and have been in touch with your colleague Uri Friedman about some sources, but when I saw your byline on the Moroccan story today I kicked myself for not having realized you were at the Atlantic; always great to reconnect with a Choatie. If you are interested in writing a follow up piece I have a number of people I would be happy to put you in touch with for interviews that might help you add some on the ground perspective from Rabat.

Included below are the names of interview candidates I can offer. Please let me know if you would like me to arrange calls.

Thanks,

Colin

Mbarka Bouaida

Member of Parliament

Ed Gabriel
Former U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco

Anouar Boukhars

Assistant Professor of Political Science and International Studies at McDaniel College and a former visiting fellow with the Brookings Doha Center

Driss Temsamani

Executive with Citigroup, author and producer as well as Founder and President of SOS Morocco

Hassan Samrhouni

A leader of the Moroccan-American community

Adil Naji

President and Founder of Arabesque, Inc. a Design and Interior Decoration firm that specializes in Moorish Architecture

Colin Judd

+1.202.863.4235 direct

+1.202.484.4884 main

colin.judd@grayling.com <<mailto:colin.judd@dutkoworldwide.com>>

412 First Street, SE

Suite 100

Washington, DC 20003

www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, September 13, 2011 10:20 AM
To: 'joseph.dyke@gmail.com'; 'fineman@huffingtonpost.com'
Subject: Response to HuffPo: "Libya's new Leaders Liberal? They Don't Even Support Self-Determination"

Dear Joe and Howard,

Firstly, thank you for covering the important issue of the Western Sahara. Please find below a response to your article from Robert Holley, Executive Director of the Moroccan American Center for Policy in Washington DC.

We would like to invite Mr. Dyke to have a conversation with Robert Holley or Ed Gabriel, the former US Ambassador to Morocco, if he is interested in following up on this issue with consideration to the position of the Moroccan people. I would be happy to arrange that call at your convenience. Please let me know if I can be of assistance – I can be reached on email as above or directly on 202-479-7145.

Best regards,

Sara Parker
Grayling for MACP

To 9/5 Huffington Post UK column, "Libya's new Leaders Liberal? They Don't Even Support Self-Determination" by Beirut-based British journalist Joe Dyke

Response from Robert Holley
Executive Director, Moroccan American Center for Policy

It is unfortunate that Joe Dyke's 9/5 opinion piece, "Libya's new Leaders Liberal?" does a serious disservice to Libyans, the facts, and to Huffington Post UK readers.

Most egregious is Mr. Dyke's implication that Libya under Mouammar Qaddafi was a supporter of democratic reforms and self-determination.

Nothing could be further from the truth. For decades Col. Qaddafi was condemned as a state supporter of terrorism for most of his years as the "Brother Leader." While best known for the 1988 downing of Pan Am flight 103 over Scotland, he also provided safe havens and training facilities for thousands of "freedom fighters" over the years, many of whom were responsible for the deaths of British citizens.

Mr. Dyke casts aspersions on the integrity of Libya's National Transition Council (NTC) leaders because they have taken a position supporting Morocco's efforts to resolve the conflict in Western Sahara through negotiating a political compromise. His bias is revealed by his narrow view on the recent events in Libya and the Maghreb, which seems confined only to advocacy of the Polisario's political agenda on the future of Western Sahara.

Mr. Dyke's assertions, which closely echo those of the Polisario, ignore the most basic facts. For example, unlike Sahrawis living under the Polisario Front's autocratic rule in refugee camps in Tindouf, Sahrawis living in Morocco have been vigorously exercising self-determination in local and national elections for more than a decade — declaring their citizenship as Moroccans, electing their own leaders, and approving a new Constitution.

Sahrawis unable to flee the deplorable Polisario-run Tindouf refugee camps in Algeria, are simply being held hostage by Polisario leaders, in a situation as morally bankrupt as the support given by Polisario members to the Qaddafi regime.

Regardless of Mr. Dyke's charges, Morocco fully complies with the position of the United Nations Security Council on Western Sahara, which calls for a resolution by the parties by negotiating a political compromise. Morocco proposed just such a compromise with its April 2007 autonomy, which is supported by the vast majority of Sahrawis in Morocco, a growing chorus of Sahrawis living elsewhere, and much of the international community, including Libya's new NTC leadership.

While Mr. Dyke accuses Libya's new leaders of hypocrisy, it is, in reality, hypocritical to suggest that the Polisario supports international law, when numerous sources have validated that hundreds of Polisario members were fighting to help Col. Qaddafi suppress his own people's rights, in defiance of the UN and NATO forces,

We hope others countries in the region will join in supporting Morocco's efforts and the UN Security Council's request to negotiate a political compromise for Western Sahara. That should include Algeria, which with Qaddafi's demise is now the sole primary sponsor of the Polisario.

It is time for Mr. Dyke and other apologists for the Polisario to visit the Western Sahara and find out what Sahrawis really want: it is the continued isolation and internment in the Polisario camps or the growing political freedoms and rule of law as an autonomous region of Morocco.

Robert Holley

Executive Director

Moroccan American Center for Policy

graylitt

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Tuesday, September 13, 2011 12:17 PM
To: 'jeff.morency@gmail.com'
Subject: Invitation: Forum on Transitional Democracies and Constitutional Processes in the Arab World

Hi Jeff,

Hope you had a great summer! I wanted to let you know about a last minute opportunity in Rabat.

This Friday and Saturday (September 16th and 17th) a Forum on Transitional Democracies and Constitutional Processes in the Arab World will take place in Rabat, Morocco, which will bring together decision makers, politicians, scholars, journalists, and civil society leaders from Morocco, Libya, Tunisia, Egypt, Jordan, and European Union member States. (Please see the Forum description below for more details.) We would like to know if you would be interested in attending this Forum.

We understand that this is very short notice, but given the timeliness of the Forum's focus and the pivotal role that Morocco, and its reform process, plays as an example in the region, we hope that you will be able to participate. You would need to travel on Wednesday, September 14 in order to arrive in time for the Forum which begins on Friday morning (September 16th). If you are unable to cover your costs, all expenses will be paid by the Moroccan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation and the Moroccan Diplomatic Club.

If you are interested and able to attend please contact:

Ms. Wassane Zailachi
Deputy Chief of Mission
Embassy of the Kingdom of Morocco
202-462-7979
wzailachi@embassyofmorocco.us

We appreciate your time and consideration and hope that you will be able to participate in this upcoming Forum – if this is not possible due to time restraints let's make sure that we catch up soon.

Best regards,
Sara

The International Forum on Transitional Democracies and Constitutional Processes in the Arab World

I. Forum Concept

A number of Arab countries are undergoing political changes that differ in at least three ways:

- In their nature: violent or peaceful
- In the events that triggered them: insurrections or citizens' demonstrations
- In their pace, controlled or endured

There have been incidents in the transitional process wherein the outcomes are emerging within a controlled evolution after events that precipitated the changes; and there are transitional processes in which ruptures have occurred between governments and the people. Such differing transitions reflect the specific nature of the political systems of each country.

Each situation being unique, each country, having its own history and specificities, should take its destiny in hand and create its own model.

However, the path to democracy is demanding in the sense that it requires a balance between freedom of expression and respect for one another. Thus, democracy is an evolutionary process that takes root in the cultural and social grounding of each country.

In this regard, legal and constitutional pedagogy is a central element of the democratic debate in these countries to achieve the balance that respects all citizens and their needs. In this perspective and in spite of certain doubts or uncertainties, the transformational message of the political debates in each one of these countries depends on the democratic posture with which it will manage its own transition.

In spite of the unique characteristics of their respective political evolutions, Arab countries are able to create a common basis of universal democratic values while being inclusive of the specific existential elements of each nation.

The new constitution of Morocco demonstrates the possibility of articulating these two basic elements.

This meeting will be the occasion to share the experiences and to exchange best practices about the constitutional processes that several Arab countries are undertaking.

II. Date and venue

Date: September, 16th and 17th

Venue: Rabat, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation

III. Modalities

The organizers will cover all participant expenses

IV. Event format

- Opening session
- 2 working sessions:
 - The first will focus on consultation methods within the framework of the constitutional processes
 - The second will discuss the role of the constitution in establishing democracies and the rule of law
- Closing session

V. Organization

The event will be organized by The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation and the Moroccan Diplomatic Club.

VI. Participants

This event will see the participation of distinguished decision makers, politicians, scholars, journalists, and civil society leaders from Morocco, Libya, Tunisia, Egypt, Jordan, and European Union member States.

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, November 25, 2011 10:25 AM
To: aboukhars@mcdaniel.edu
Subject: Independent: Moroccan elections challenged by voter mistrust

Good morning Anouar-

Please see Joe Dyke's story as below – you are quoted at the end. The story is very straightforward – you and Ambassador Gabriel lend great credibility to the reporting and this is a much more balanced piece than we usually see in the left leaning British media.

Thank you again for all of your help!

Best,
Sara

<http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/africa/moroccan-elections-challenged-by-voter-mistrust-6267514.html>

Moroccan elections challenged by voter mistrust

Joe Dyke
Thursday, 24 November 2011

Moroccans head to the polls tomorrow for the first time since King Mohammed VI offered significant concessions towards democracy, with continued scepticism about the extent power has shifted to the people. Social activists have announced a boycott of the elections and turnout is expected to be low, with the Islamic PJD party tipped to emerge as the largest party.

With dictatorial leaders falling in nearby Libya, Egypt and Tunisia, Morocco's elections are a testing ground both of the King's reforming credentials and of the theory that Arab countries can achieve democracy without major change at the top.

In February, on the back of revolutions in Tunisia and Egypt, tens of thousands of Moroccans took to the streets, calling for human rights and democracy in a country ruled by the Alaouite dynasty since independence in 1956. Yet, unlike in Tunisia or Egypt, the King remained popular with many of his subjects and was quick to offer reforms, including higher wages and an improved level of democracy, plans that were overwhelming approved in a new referendum in July.

The new constitution promises to give the pre-existing parliament more power, with the largest party automatically nominating the prime minister and the King losing control over many areas of policy. Senior opposition figures have dismissed the changes as window dressing and are boycotting the elections, with thousands taking to the streets this week to protest.

"All the parties that supported constitutional reform were not demanding [it] before the Arab spring. So the guys who are now asking people to go vote and participate in the elections, all of them were explaining to us for years before the Arab Spring that we don't need to reform the constitution. And all the people who are demanding reform are still demanding it i.e. they are not happy with what happened in July," said Aboubakr Jamaï, an award-winning Moroccan journalist once given a three-month suspended sentence after reports in his magazine accused a Moroccan minister of corruption.

Sources close to the King are quick to point out that the new constitution restricts his power and could, over time, transform him into a constitutional monarch. Ed Gabriel, former American ambassador to Morocco, said: "I think that the whole reform initiative was started by the King of Morocco. There is a lot of excitement to move in the direction of reform, he must also empower civil society a lot more than before."

"In reading this constitution it is not unlike the constitutional changes in Spain 20 to 30 years ago. In that case some of the power was held by the monarch, as it is today, specifically religious affairs."

The February 20 movement, which led the protests against the regime earlier this year, is urging its supporters to reject the poll and it is expected that turnout could be lower than 50 per cent. "The government has to show the protesters they are for real. Many of them are holding back saying – 'we don't believe it, we don't trust it.' The proof is in the pudding," Mr Gabriel added.

There are few reliable polls in Morocco but the Islamist Justice and Development Party (PJD) is tipped to form the biggest block in the parliament, with around 80-90 seats in the 395-member parliament. Under the new constitution they will automatically be able to choose the prime minister, but the decision could still be rejected by the King.

"The PJD needs over 190 seats for a majority but it won't get that. [It] has serious difficulties in the rural areas and that is where the most seats are. To compensate for that they have to over-perform in urban areas," said Anouar Boukhars, an expert on Moroccan politics.

The PJD, who take inspiration from the ruling AK Party in Turkey, will be forced to form a coalition with parties it disagrees with and in the event that it fails it will be forced to seek out a higher power – the King.

"The prime minister will be from the PJD but it will not change anything in the system, in the sense that the government will be a patchwork of parties who have nothing to do with each other," said Hicham Almiraat, a Moroccan February 20th activist and blogger. "The King will play the role of arbiter of all this – so we are back to square one."

sara parker
senior vice president
202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, May 20, 2011 11:53 AM
To: 'adam@resonanceinteractive.tv'
Subject: Mbarka Bouaida

In 2007, Mbarka Bouaida was elected as the youngest member of the Moroccan Parliament (House of Representatives) to represent the Commune of Anfa in Casablanca, Morocco's economic center. A Moroccan of Sahrawi origin, she is a member of the National Council of the National Rally for Independents (RNI), which forms a part of the current Moroccan governmental coalition. During the 2009-2010 session, Ms. Bouaida was the Chair of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, National Defense and Religious Affairs, after serving two years as Vice-Chair of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. She also represents Morocco in the Euro-Mediterranean Parliamentary Assembly.

Ms. Bouaida is currently on the Board of Directors of Societe Petrole du Maghreb, an oil distribution company based in Casablanca, where she has held several director level posts since 2003.

After completing her studies in financial management in Casablanca, Ms. Bouaida received her Master's in Marketing and Communication from the Université de Toulouse in France and her Master's in Business Administration from Greenwich University in Great Britain.

Ms. Bouaida speaks French, Arabic, English and Spanish fluently.

Sara Parker
Senior Vice President
202-479-7145
Skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Thursday, May 26, 2011 2:57 PM
To: 'alexseminal@gmail.com'
Subject: Invitation to Panel Discussion - June 2

Categories: Red Category

Hi Alex – I've been reading your blog, specifically your coverage of AQIM, and saw on Twitter that you would be in DC next week.

I thought you may be interested in a panel discussion taking place at ASMEA on Thursday, June 2:

Terrorism in North Africa After bin Laden: Challenges for US Policy

Below is the program overview – please let me know if you would like to be added to the guest list. My contact details are as below as well – please do not hesitate to be in touch if you have any questions.

Best regards,
Sara Parker

Program

11:30am- Introduction: The Challenge of Al-Qaeda in the Maghreb (AQIM)

11:45am- The Landscape After bin Laden

Richard Minitier, investigative journalist, author of two New York Times best selling-books: Losing bin Laden and Shadow War

12:00pm- Terrorism and Security in the Mediterranean

Jose Maria Gil Carre (Chema Gil), is a Spanish journalist, author of “Lo que el Frente Polisario Esconde” (“What the Polisario is Hiding”)

12:15pm- Confronting the Challenge: Efforts by the Regional Players

Mohammed Benhammou, Director of the Moroccan Center for Strategic Studies, Rabat

12:30pm- US Policy Responses to AQIM post bin Laden

Professor Ricardo Laremont, SUNY Binghamton

12:45 Q&A, closing remarks

sara.parker
senior vice president
202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling
www.grayling.com

01/13/12

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, July 01, 2011 10:24 AM
To: 'alexseminal@gmail.com'
Subject: Morocco Votes: July 1-3

Dear Alex-

Moroccans are casting their votes this weekend in an historic referendum on Constitutional reforms. The reforms were announced on June 17 by His Majesty King Mohammed VI and are designed to strengthen Morocco's democratic institutions and establish it as a constitutional monarchy.

In addition to voting across Morocco, polling stations will be open worldwide at embassies, consulates, and other centers to allow Moroccan voters living abroad to participate. In the U.S., twelve polling stations will be open, from July 1-3, in Boston, Chicago, Houston, Los Angeles, New York City, Orlando and in the Washington, DC area.

If you are planning to cover the voting in Morocco and abroad and would like to speak directly with a source on the events in Morocco and their thoughts on the impact of the reforms we would be happy to facilitate a conversation.

Included below are the names of interview candidates we can offer. Please let us know if we can be of assistance.

Thank you.
Sara
434-851-8762

Ed Gabriel
Former U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco

Anouar Boukhars
Assistant Professor of Political Science and International Studies at McDaniel College and a former visiting fellow with the Brookings Doha Center

Driss Tamsamani
Executive with Citigroup, author and producer as well as Founder and President of SOS Morocco

Hassan Samrhouni
A leader of the Moroccan-American community

Adil Naji
President and Founder of Arabesque, Inc. a Design and Interior Decoration firm that specializes in Moorish Architecture

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, July 08, 2011 10:58 AM
To: 'alexseminal@gmail.com'
Subject: Morocco voted for reform - what's next?
Attachments: Driss El Yazami_bio.pdf

Hi Alex –

Last week Moroccan citizens voted for reform that will further democracy and human rights, create a stronger parliament and an independent judiciary, as well as advancing regionalization, religious freedoms and gender equality. So what next?

Driss El Yazami, President, National Human Rights Council and Member, Moroccan Constitutional Reform Council will be in Washington next week to speak at the German Marshall Fund on Constitutional Reform and the Outlook for Change in Morocco. Details on Driss El Yazami are as below and attached for your reference.

He is available for interviews early next week and I would be happy to arrange a call for you to discuss the future of Morocco.

Thank you
Sara Parker

Driss El Yazami

Driss El Yazami currently serves as the President of the National Human Rights Council of the Kingdom of Morocco (CNDH). The CNDH was established in March 2011 to replace the Advisory Council on Human Rights, a body created in 1990 to promote human rights and address past abuses in Morocco. In his capacity as President, Mr. El Yazami is responsible for investigating and monitoring human rights violations and ensuring that Moroccan law is compatible with international human rights law.

Mr. El Yazami also recently served as a member of the Advisory Council for Constitutional Reform (CCRC), a body tasked with developing a constitutional reform plan and organizing a national dialogue on the revision of the constitution. From March to June 2011, the Council met with political parties, trade unions, youth organizations, and civil society to develop a series of constitutional amendments aimed at consolidating democracy in the Kingdom. The amendments, which include the establishment of a constitutional monarchy with separation of powers, enhanced responsibilities for local and regional governments, and clear support for the multicultural, multi-religious character of Moroccan society, were overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum held on July 1st.

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Thursday, June 02, 2011 10:37 AM
To: alexseminal@gmail.com
Subject: Terrorism in North Africa - today at noon
Attachments: ASMEA PRESS ADVISORY for 6-2 Panel on Terrorism in N Africa 5-31-11.pdf; BIOGRAPHIES - ASMEA Panel on Terrorism in N Africa Capitol Hill 6-2-11.pdf

Importance: High

Hi Alex,

Just to follow up from my email last week. The ASMEA panel is happening today at noon. I have included the invitation as below for your reference along with the biographies of the speakers. Two of the panelists, Mohammed Benhammou and Jose Mariá Gil (Chema Gil) are available for interviews today and tomorrow if you are interested. Both panelists have strong, newsworthy perspectives to share about the alarming rise of AQIM in the Maghreb & Sahel, its potential to derail Arab Spring reforms, and also Qadaffi's hiring of mercenaries from Algeria and the Polisario.

Please let me know if you would be interested in attending or if I can provide any additional information for your reference.

Best regards,

Sara Parker

TERRORISM IN NORTH AFRICA AFTER BIN LADEN: CHALLENGES FOR US POLICY

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Tuesday, May 31, 2011

EXPERTS PANEL
Thursday, June 2
12:00-2:00pm

1777 F Street, NW
Washington, DC 20006
1st Floor Conference Room

Introduction: The Challenge of Al Qaeda in the Maghreb (AQIM)

The Landscape After bin Laden

RICHARD MINITER investigative journalist and author of the New York Times best selling books Losing bin Laden and Shadow War

Terrorism and Security in the Mediterranean

JOSE MARIA GIL GARRE (CHEMA GIL) Spanish journalist and author, expert on terrorism and Euro-Med Security issues

Confronting the Challenge: Efforts by the Regional Players

MOHAMMED BENHAMMOU Director, Moroccan Center for Strategic Studies, Rabat

U.S. Policy Responses to AQIM post-bin Laden

PROF. RICARDO RENE LAREMONT SUNY Binghamton

Q&A, Closing Remarks

MEDIA: Please contact SUZANNE KURTZ at 202 680 9255 or

Sara Parker

From: Sara Parker
Sent: Friday, June 10, 2011 2:45 PM
To: alexseminal@gmail.com
Subject: Preventing the 'Arab Spring' from Becoming the 'Season of Discontent' and 'Terrorism in North Africa After bin Laden'
Attachments: Dangerous Pragmatism of AQIM (Pham-JMEA 2011).pdf

Hi Alex,

I'm sorry we weren't able to get you to the panel when you were in DC. I wanted to share with you the wrap up from both the Atlantic Council symposium and the AMEA panel discussion.

The details of the Atlantic Council symposium, Uncertain Forecast: Preventing the 'Arab Spring' from becoming the 'Season of Discontent', are posted on the Atlantic Council's website at <http://www.acus.org/event/uncertain-forecast-north-africa-preventing-arab-spring-becoming-season-discontent> and include full transcripts and audio playback of the panel presentations.

I have also attached an article by one of the speakers, Dr. Peter Pham, titled "The Dangerous Pragmatism of al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb." In the piece, Pham underscores how "AQIM has shown itself willing to partner with drug traffickers, smugglers, and other criminal elements as well as dissident factions like the Polisario Front in order to gain the resources required to continue the pursuit of its radical agenda over an increasingly broader geopolitical and social space."

I would be happy to set up a call for you to speak to Ambassador Gabriel, or any of the other speakers, at your convenience. Please let me know if you are interested or if I can provide any additional information.

Best regards,
Sara Parker

202-479-7145
skype: sara.parker.grayling

Experts Warn of Risk to US if 'Arab Spring' Turns to 'Season of Discontent,' Call for US to Partner with Reformers to Spur Growth, Positive Change

Resurgent al-Qaeda, returning mercenaries, will exploit Libya chaos and arms to spread violence

Washington DC (June 3)—Foreign policy experts at two forums this week examined the seismic changes of the 'Arab Spring' and focused on the importance of US and European engagement with progressive leaders in the Middle East and North Africa for determining whether the current unrest will lead to reform, repression, or violent revolution.

Well-armed mercenaries recruited by Col. Qadhafi from Mali, the Polisario Front in Algeria, and elsewhere, and resurgent terrorists from al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), are stocking up on arms from Libya and are eager to exploit unrest in the region after Osama bin Laden's death.

At an Atlantic Council symposium, "Preventing the 'Arab Spring' from Becoming the 'Season of Discontent'," policy experts discussed the uncertain forecast and how to promote positive change in this pivotal part of the world.